ENVISIONING MUSLIMS: THE MIDDLE AGES AND TODAY: Course Description

Our course will survey how Muslims are represented in the dominant cultural media of two important periods: the period known in the West as the European Middle Ages—a time in which Europe first became conscious of Muslims through Islamic invasions, multiple forms of cultural contact and negotiation, and the international wars known as “the Crusades”—and in the contemporary world of the 20th and 21st centuries, when Muslims have, once again, become prominent in the Western imagination.

In the medieval period, we will read selections from European chronicles and romances, Arab histories and biographies, and other cultural media, to see how Europeans envisioned Muslims, and how Muslims envisioned themselves. In the contemporary period, we will view clips from digital media representing several genres—including, Hollywood action adventure movies, biographies, television comedy, musicals, and films of mixed genre—to see how, and if, modern representations of Muslims differ from premodern representations. We will also view how Muslims represent themselves in digital media, including clips from Youssef Chahine’s “Saladin,” “Paradise Now,” Nadine Labaki’s “Caramel” and “Where do we go from here?” and the Axis of Evil comedy tour.

Course requirements: a collaboratively researched and authored term paper of at least 35 pages (50%), 1 in-class presentation (20%), attendance (10%) and active participation (20%). Texts listed here are suggestive, not final. All premodern texts read in modern English translation. Chahine’s “Saladin” has English subtitles.

ENVISIONING MUSLIMS: THE MIDDLE AGES AND TODAYCOURSE POLICY: READ THIS CAREFULLY

The requirements for this course are: class attendance and active participation in large- and small-group discussions; the reading of your assigned texts, as demonstrated by your informed participation in large- and small-group classroom discussion; an in-class presentation on appropriate cultural, literary, historical or media material; and a final term paper that will be collaboratively researched and written in teams, due on Monday, November 30. Merely “speaking up” in class does not qualify as informed discussion that demonstrates your reading of assigned texts.

Final grades for this course will be earned as follows: 10% for attendance, 20% for participation; 20% for an in-class research presentation, and 50% for a collaborative term paper of a minimum of 35 pages, typed and double-spaced. Grades will be as earned; there will be no grading curve.

Attendance will be taken from Week 2; 4 absences lead to an automatic grade of F for the course; 3 absences lead to no higher than a final grade of C for the course. One point is deducted from your attendance percentage for every absence. Failure to make a presentation when a presentation has been scheduled will automatically result in an F for the presentation grade. Persistent lateness for class is penalized.

Presentations can take a variety of forms: discussion of historical, social, artistic, cultural, literary, scientific, political, or background material related to Muslims, Islam, the Near East, or the depiction of these subjects in the medieval period, today, or the eras between. The first 4 presentations of the semester are on assigned topics, and will each earn an extra 5% bonus points if it receives a grade of 18% or above of the 20% assigned grade for presentations.

When in doubt as to whether the subject or form of the presentation you have in mind is appropriate, please consult me in advance before or after class, during office hours, or by e-mail. The maximum time for presentations is 25 minutes; presentations exceeding this time limit, and extending into the time allotment of another student, will be penalized. The first 4 presentations, however, are allowed up to 35 minutes each. Presentations and term papers must be on different subjects: there should be no overlap in topic between your presentation and your term paper/project.

Term papers: We will conduct a collaborative research experiment in this course, focusing on a subject of immense current importance, with a view of enabling students to imagine how they would intervene effectively in today’s world through research, argument, and writing. Students will form “pods,” or small groups, to conduct research and writing on the so-called “Islamic State.” Each pod will consist of no fewer than 2 students and no more than 4, and will make its own decisions on the assignment of individual work and writing within the pod: the grade earned for the paper is assigned to every individual in the pod.

Six topics are offered, though you may suggest additional possibilities to me: (1) Is the “Islamic State Islamic? Argue Yes; (2) Is the “Islamic State” Islamic? Argue No; (3) Create a document convincing potential “jihadi brides” not to emigrate to the “Islamic State”; (4) Create a document convincing men against emigrating to the “Islamic State;” (5) What is “Rojava” or Syrian Kurdistan, and its role in combating the “Islamic State”? (6) How should the U.S., Europe, and the world combat the “Islamic State” today?

There will be NO EXTENSIONS for submission of writing assignments.
